However, we have not seen any method that can be said to be homogeneous, meaning a single method of shorthand for all purposes. This is because most of the methods discussed have been used for a variety of purposes in a variety of circumstances. We now turn our attention to the most general purpose of shorthand—that is, shorthand as a means of communication. Note: For more information about writing, see the article called "Write Like a Pro." The Practice of Shorthand for Communication Shorthand may be used to communicate orally as well as in print. In the branch of linguistics known as expressive pedagogy, there are two schools of thought about how to teach reading. One is the so-called picture story approach, and the other is the so-called word approach. In the picture story approach, the children are taught to read by using pictures to represent words in a sentence; they are taught to make sense by making the pictures fit the words. In the word approach, the children are taught to make sense by reading the words; they are taught to read by reading words. It is obvious that the picture story approach is more "pictorial" than the word approach, and the word approach is more "linguistic" than the picture story approach. However, both approaches have their weaknesses. The picture story approach becomes fatiguing for the student to the point where he or she either becomes ineffective or cannot read at all. The word approach is not without its drawbacks as well, although it is the approach that will give the students the most power to read successfully and write well. It has come to be considered the goal of most people to learn to read in a word fashion. The problem with most people's

This is what I have done : vector > v; void AddElement(int n,string s) { v[n].push_back(s); } void Sort() { sort(v.begin(), v.end()); } When I run the program this is what it does: 1) adds elements into vector and prints out them 2) calls Sort function 3) prints nothing 4) CRASH!!!!!!!!!! I can't figure out what's wrong with this, any help would be appreciated. A: In particular, the second template parameter of the sort function is the type of the container that it has to sort. That container is: v[n].push_back(s); The type of the container (vector>) does not match the type of the container that is supposed to be sorted (vector>). The following is a syntax error: sort(v.begin(), v.end()); What you need is: sort(v.begin(), v.end(), [](const vector>& a, const vector>& b) { return a Uhh, so guess what? I'm on my own here. I can no longer rely on you to take my side when
