The program comes with a helpful user interface and helps you boost audio quality, and carry out some other useful operations as well. Clean feature lineup. The interface of the application is easy to master and comes with an intuitive layout. In the output device mode, you have to pick the appropriate profile from among 5.1 surround channel, stereo, and mono. The program lets you sort audio tracks in the playlist. You can also drag and drop the contents of a folder to the playlist, add an entire folder, and add audio streams via a custom URL. You can export playlists to the M3U file format. You can also search for and play a specific audio file among your playlist, jump to the next or previous song, as well as adjust the volume of the chosen track. Basic playback controls are embedded in the main window for helping you pause, play, or stop the current audio selection. Audio profile modes include 5.1 surround channel, mp3D headphone stereo, and MP3 stereo. In order to remove all items from the playlist, jump to the next or previous song in the playlist, check out details about the track number, track duration, audio profile, bitrate, and sampling frequency, attenuate LFE by 10dB, set up the surround mode, as well as specify the initial audio profile used at startup, namely MP3 Surround, mp3D, stereo, or the last used mode. You can also adjust the sound balance, monitor the level of the sound, mute or un-mute the sound, and even set a specific input device for the program. To sum up, Fraunhofer IIS MP3 Surround Player is an intuitive and practical tool for helping you boost audio quality, for instance, when listening to music, videos, or working on tasks related to audio production.
