Religion vs. Science! Science: the study of nature and the things about nature that are naturally interesting. Religion: the belief in and worship of a superhuman controlling power, esp. a personal God or gods: the doctrine, tenets, etc., of a religion. The thing is, both science and religion are man made and man controlled. There will always be someone who will look at a situation and come up with an interpretation of it that supports the man made creation that has been done, and there will be someone who comes up with an interpretation that supports the creation that naturally occurs. It is like the issue of abortion. There are those who believe in the best interest of the child at all costs. They will take the women of the world's word for it and proceed with the pregnancy. Then there are those who will use their better judgement to determine if the child is in fact a potential threat to the woman and abort the child. Then there are those who take into consideration if the child is going to live in a family that will treat it with love and respect. Then there are those that are still involved in the whole issue of abortion who look at a situation and take the time to learn about both sides of the issue. Then, with a degree of good judgement and integrity that does not compromise one way or the other, they come to the conclusion of what is best for the individual involved. One thing about religion and science, there is a division between the two. The scientists are not going to argue with a religionist because of their belief in the divine, so it is their belief in the study of the divine that they will have to
